BEFORE THE CONVENTION

Mapei iz a heavy-weight as parties go. Far larger than any other political group in this country, leadership has fallen to it, if for no other reason, as a result of its mass following. For many years its leaders felt confident that whatever they might decide, the bulk of their party would support them. The opposition the bulk of their party would support them. The opposition has liked to accuse the Mapai leadership of authoratic shaviour — an accusation received as a compliment rather than anything class. It was after all, proof that Mapai was the country's ruling organization.

This situation seemed to be as natural as Government seems natural as Government seems natural in a well-organized society. The elections to the Third Knesset, however, showed that nothing is "natural" in politics. As a result, there has been much soul-searching among Mapai leaders in the past year, and some conclusions have been some conclusions have been elaborated that are to see the light of day at the forthcom-ing convention.

pamphlet by saying that it conceled nothing. That is true in a sense, for the Report does put its finger on many touches upon the political issues. The omission is probably deliberate: politicians at the convention itself. In any case, the impression is gained that key men of the Party place a good deal of faith in organization, and consider that it was mall-organization which cost the party much of the popularity that it enjoyed seven years.

New Appointments

The party now has four organizational levels. At the lower end of the pyramid, every member of the party votes to send a delegate to the party convention. The

$2,000 — elects a Council from among its own membership The Council, in its turn, elects

The Council, is its turn, electa a Central Committee, and the Central Committee appoints a Secretariat. If you wish to place the apex on the structure, it is the secretariat which sheets a Secretary-General. There is also the Pullical Committee, whose membership is rather ill-defined. In practice, the Council has met only eight times nince 1949, and not once in the past two years. It was therefore decided to propose to the forthcoming Convention that it should abolish the Council slogether.

The 10-man Central Committee on the other hand, has proved entirely viable. R also may have lost some of its lustre, and sverage attendance, at its meetings is only about 75 members, but it meets approximately every six weeks to hear reports or current issues. The Central Committee votes on proposals presented by the party leadership, but it has bappened only once in the past seven years that a majority of the membership should have rejected a draft proposal placed before it. This was the Prime Ministers' proposal for unified state education three years ago. And even then the same Committee a few weeks later approved the agreement which had been reached between the Mapai and the General Zionist Knesset groups.

Political Committee

Political Committee

Political Committee

The status of the Political Committee is somewhat obscure. When it was first established, it was probably intended to create a small group of key-men who could decide urgent or important matters of internal or external importance, more quickly and effectively than the unwieldy Central Committee. The Political Committee is also convened when the matter underconsiderations and must be digested by a smaller group digested by a smaller group before it can be presented to the Central Committee. In practice, of the last 135 issues d'ecuased by the Political Committee, no more than 19 were put to vote in the larger body.

The Secretariat consists of a small body of executives whose responsibility it is to keep the machinery of the party running. Since 1954 it has had 20 members (there were eight secretaries until that time.) They are chosen with an eye to ensuring cooperation with other branches of the party's activities, and include the Prime Minister. Mr. Ben Gurion, the former Foreign Minister, Mr. Moshe Sharett, and the Minister of Labour and former Secretary General of the Histadrut, Mr. M. Namir.

THE JERUSALEM POST

Jerusalem Poet Reporter
TEL AVIV, Tuesday. — The three-year-old El Yam company which operates a tramp" service will own 83,000 tons of shipping within a year, and double that figure in another five years. Mr. R Rakanati director of the company, told the Press yesterday.

Pressmen visited the 13,000-ton oil tanker Yam Souf, acquired by the company in June and now on its second call to a home port. It is transporting oil from Russis for the Delek Company.

Outlining the company's future plans, Mr. Rakanati said, but Israel tramp shipping was handicapped in a competitive market by the high cost of retaining local crews. El Yam ships employ 80 per cent Israel within a year will come from Germany and the subsidiaries, one-third of which is owned by foreign investors, are required to pay $3m. in cash before delivery. The rest of the money will come from for a year or so.

Elect Patriarch Sept. 7 A firman (decree) signed by King Hussein of Jordan permitting the Greek Orthodox Church in Jerusalem to carry on with its elections for a new Greek Orthodox Patriarch was made public last week and later forwarded to the Greek Orthodox Holy Synod in the Old City in Jerusalem, a spokesman of the Patriarchal Secretariat has informed The Jerusalem Post.

The elections, indefinitely The elections, indefinitely postponed a month ago after the Holy Synod's rejection of the candidacy of several Arab clergymen, will take place on September 7 (August 25 according to the Gregorian Calendar). The Arab candidates were refused because, by ancient tradition, Patriarchs of Jerusalem are of Greek origin.

Invitations to the elections, printed in Arabic, were distributed to Greek and Arab Orthodox clergymen in the various parishes in Israel. The new Greek Orthodox Patriarch of Jerusalem will succeed the late Kirlos Timo-theos Themelis, who died seven months ago.

Very Satisfied
The Haga commander of the manoeuvre told the Press that he was very satisfied with the day's work. The old-timers had shown stamina and will power. He particularly praised the men and women of Magen David Adom, who took the exercises very seriously (as did the men, women and children marked as casualties). While pedestrians and residents ran for cover as soon as the sirens sounded, leaving the crowded Tel Aviv main streets as empty at midday as in the early morning hours, thousands of Haga personnel, first aid workers, firemen, policemen and exercise referces and observers, were hard at work.

At first, the public took cover in doorways, but as things became "hot" and interesting, their curiosity mostive the heatest of them. Generally, they kept at a distance from the sites that were hit, and did not interfere with the rescue work. Very few went into shelters. The headquarters of the manoeuvre was 'the nerve centre for all rescue operations. From that control room, the first brigades, medical corps, police, rescue units, electricity and water repairers were directed, diverted and rediverted, and every incident was registered thera.

Cafe Must Close Doors Earlier

TEL AVIV, Tuesday, — One of the largest and most brightly lit cafes on Rehov Disengoff, the Rowal, will close its doors at 11.30 tonight instead of some two hours later, following the decision this morning of Chief Magistrate B. Giladi. He gave judgment in the case brought by 30 neighbours of the cafe, who claimed that the late opening of the ratablishment interfered with their sleep.

The Magistrate had based his ruling on evidence given to the Jewish Agency for improving conditions and services in immigrant settlementa, but 7,000 families still lived in temporary housing, it was said.

Lower-priced water and electricity were also demanded by the cafe's patrons over a long period could result in loss of sleep, with the consequent effect on the neighbours of badly strained nerves.

The more rapid growth of the Moshav movement by comparison with that of the kibbutzim is understandable. Kibbutzim must recruit their new members mainly among young people who have grown up with the idea of collective existence before them. In expertal their new sources of strength are graduates of the youth movements, children of the kibbutzim and pioneers preparing for this form of farming and life abroad. It is comparatively rare that an individual joins a kibbutz as an adult and adjusts himself satisfactorily to its life. It is amply It is comparatively rare that an individual joins a kibbutz as an adult and adjusts himself satisfactorily to its life. It is amply clear however.

a system of organized guidance and instruction has been elaborated which is a tribute to the devotion and volunteer spirit of the older and better established moshavim. But it has defects which are now under close scrutiny. In general the instructors are young and Israel-born, and their very youth usually makes them unable to understand or respect the differing social and cultural backgrounds of their charges, who are often so much older than they are themselves. Today the young instructors are being more carefully coach. much older than they are themselves. Today the young instructors are being more carefully coached in make them more flexible in their approach, and some help has indeed been given, in a limited way at present, by a young ambropologist working in the Negev under the aegis of the Henrietta Szold Institute. One of the causes of instability in new imparant moshavim, for instance is the prevalence of the clan or hamula tradition which may cause a private quarrel between two men to be rapidly magnified into a feud between two halves of a village, and lead to its ultimate disruption.

The moshavim, too, suffer from the chronic problem which afflicts kibbutzim, the difficulty of obtaining sufficient credit on terms which are not so onerous which are not so onerous return for his labour.

These difficulties cannot be solved by the unaided resources of the moshav mavement and it is to be hoped that the various governmental agencies together with the Jewish Agency will take steps to bring a greater stability to this most sensitive and important section of the country's economy.

West's Undignified Suez Backdown Hurting Its Prestige

From the journalists' point of view, the chief attraction promised to be the twice-daily press conference held by the Russians, whose press of ficer had the text of Mr. Sheollov's opening speech ready in three languages within 30 min. tes of the first seasion's close. The Russians may not like Western newspapers, but their new Foreign Minister ("aesthetically a vast improvement on his predecessor," to quote the "Guardian" once more) is an old hand at the game and not inclined to pass up any opportunities.

inclined to pass up any opportunities.

For the rest, anticlimax is not merely the best, but the only possible description of what is currently taking place here. After the public uproar of the past three weeks, with __ats of war on both sides and the neutrals genuinely panicky, there is now an overwhelming sentiment in favour c burying the whole issue as rapidly as possible.

Baghdad pact is next on the list of the Colonel's targets.

"The great question now is a hether Egypt — which for practical purposes means Abdul Nasser, despite Sir Anthony Eden's proclaimed intention to unhorse him — will accept some form of international supervision of the Canal's management that is more than a piece of paper to be torn up at the next opportunity. Jehind this looms uncertainty over the size of the economy bribe that will have to be dangled in front of Nasser to gain his assent.

It is not improbable that in the end this will turn out to be a more expensive affair than the original offer to finance the Aswan Dam, whose abrupt withdrawal provided the ostensible excuse for the "nationalization" of the Suez Company.

While this important issue remains under debate, some general reflections on the recent course of Western diplomacy are beginning to emerge from the torrent of parliamentary, diplomatic and press comment in recent weeks.

Almost everyone is now assent that it is not served.

Language is being cheapened. Soon a threat by one government to drop atom bombs on another will be received with loud guffaws by the cognoscenti. On the other hand, the distinction between cold war and cold peace is also being eroded. If the Brittish and the French really mean what they have been saying about Abdul Nasser, they must now work for his overthrow, no matter whether or not be accepts the conference decisions. Perhaps the only point on which there is agreement is anger at the constant failure of the "experts" to foresee trouble.
